Bankruptcy is one of the paths taken by debtors in solving debt problems when the debtor is unable or estimates not to be able to pay debts to creditors that are due and can be collected. PKPU is a legal remedy that can be carried out by providing an opportunity for debtors to restructure their debts, including paying all or part of their debts to creditors.

The formulation of the problem in this thesis is how to restructure debtor debt repayment obligations to creditors during the covid-19 pandemic, how are the obstacles faced by creditors and debtors in debt settlement and solutions in solving problems of paying bankruptcy debts during the covid-19 pandemic, how are legal considerations judge on the decision of the Supreme Court Number 830 K/Pdt.Sus-Pailit/2020.

The research method used is descriptive analysis that leads to normative juridical law research by analyzing the Supreme Court's decision Number 830 K/Pdt.Sus-Pailit/2020.

The results showed that the restructuring of the postponement of debt repayment obligations of debtors to creditors during the Covid-19 pandemic was proposed by debtors to creditors with the applicant submitting a reconciliation proposal to all creditors and in the peace proposal essentially submitting an offer to reschedule the payment of debt installments accompanied by collateral or guarantees in the form of granting mortgage rights to guarantee the payment of the collateral. The obstacles faced by creditors and debtors in settling debts during the Covid-19 pandemic are the views of the public who consider credit restructuring due to COVID-19 as the elimination of customer debt during this pandemic. The judge's legal consideration in the Supreme Court's decision Number 830 K/Pdt.Sus-Pailit/2020 is the condition that the peace plan is not accepted or rejected is a quorum, because 2 (two) concurrent creditors unanimously rejected the PT. Yeyeom Design, so that the debtor of PT. Yeyeom Design must be declared bankrupt with all the legal consequences.
